A look into the minds of Tsarnaev's fan girls

Jahar-ing. Experts weigh in on a startling fan following, and a supporter speaks out.

Nearly six months after the Boston Marathon bombings, as the city continues to reel and heal, the fan base of 20-year-old suspected terrorist Dzhokhar "Jahar" Tsarnaev is going strong.

Tsarnaev supporter Karina, who asked that her last name be withheld, said her loyalty is due to a strong belief that he is innocent — not an attraction.

"I saw a lot of the teenage fan girls in the beginning, but that has diminished because we called them out pretty quickly," said Karina. "It is obvious that he's a good-looking young man.

"Speaking for myself, I don't see a cute guy. I see someone who got screwed over big time, and it could happen to me or anyone. I will never give up. I am there 110 percent."

Like Karina, thousands of supporters insist their loyalty is due to a steadfast belief that Tsarnaev is innocent. Others, mainly young women, come dangerously close to an unhealthy infatuation with a high-profile alleged criminal.

"There is the notion that [fans] are attracted to someone who, albeit for a heinous reason, is famous," said Dr. Carlos Cuevas, a Cambridge-based clinical psychologist. "For others, it may be a rescue fantasy. They believe they're going to save this individual."

Tsarnaev is currently being held in solitary confinement at a federal prison in Devens, Mass. He receives letters, books and financial support from admirers.

"People contacting him may have a thought, idea or fantasy about who he is without really knowing him," said Cuevas. "It's pulled together from what they see in the media and read about what he was like before."

A quick search of "Jahar" on Twitter shows that Tsarnaev's admirers regularly take to social media to express feelings of affection.

"i hate when people say 'im in love with a criminal.' If you haven't realised, you're basically saying he did it," one fan tweeted. Another said, "Yes I do love Jahar but I'm not in love with him. I care about him and I love him like a brother even though I've never even met him."

According to forensic psychoanalyst William J. Massicotte, a lot of that comes from the nature of adolescence.

"They do have to rebel, in order to consolidate the beginnings of a separate adult identity," said Massicotte. "There is a forbidden element to sexuality, and it helps make it more attractive. Do any of us feel surprised by the fact that gang members have girlfriends? No, not really."

Criminal obsession

Experts believe people's fascination with high-profile criminals and suspects is a complex issue that varies with each case — but that the infatuations can be indicative of deeper issues.

- "I think it speaks to some degree about your choice and the comfort about being in a relationship. ... It does say something about your confidence and how you go about choosing partners," said Dr. Carlos Cuevas.
- Dr. William J. Massicotte said that few females act on their "passing fantasies," but "those who may suffer from borderline personality disorder, or are from deprived backgrounds — or both — are more inclined."

Contentious cover

Many believe that this month's "Rolling Stone" did little to help the fan fever, and in fact made some adolescent admirers drool.

"They really put jahar on the cover of Rolling Stones, wowowowow lol he looks hot though," one woman tweeted last month.

Another said that the terror suspect "is smoking hot. Omg I'd f— him blind."

The polished cover was so infuriating to Mass. State Police Sgt. Sean Murphy that it prompted him to leak photos from Tsarnaev's April 19 bloody arrest.

Indecent action. Man allegedly flashes father and son at Revere Beach

A Winthrop man will be in court today after he allegedly exposed himself to a father and young boy inside a Revere Beach bathroom over the weekend.

Clifford Avery, 44, faces charges including indecent exposure, assault and battery and resisting arrest, according to state police.

Police were called to the Shirley Avenue bathhouse at Revere Beach at about 5:40 p.m. Saturday for a report of an assault. While there, troopers learned that a father and his 5-year-old son were in the restroom when a man walked in and exposed himself. The man then ran away.

Troopers were able to locate the man, later identified as Avery, and began to chase him along the Blue Line tracks, state police said. Blue Line service was interrupted for a brief time during the chase and while police arrested him.

The father and boy were not physically harmed, state police said.

Avery is scheduled to be arraigned today in Chelsea District Court.

State rep. demands DA's resignation over Remy case

Murder investigation. The Middlesex district attorney's office said the move was political.

Middlesex District Attorney Marian Ryan should resign after her office agreed to release Jared Remy on his own recognizance just one day before he allegedly killed his girlfriend, a state representative said.

Rep. Jim Lyons, a Republican from Andover, said Saturday that Ryan should resign her office and other politicians should demand she do so.

"Governor Patrick should demand the immediate resignation of his appointment Marian T. Ryan as Middlesex district attorney," Lyons said in a statement posted on his Facebook page. "The fact that the district attorney allowed Jared Remy back on the street after he assaulted Jennifer Martel is inexcusable."

Remy, the son of Red Sox broadcaster Jerry Remy, allegedly fatally stabbed his girlfriend, Martel, late Thursday night their Waltham home. He pleaded not guilty Friday.

A spokeswoman for Ryan said that Lyons was trying to "politicize" the case.

"This is an unfortunate attempt to politicize a tragic situation. Our focus is on prosecuting the person responsible for killing Jennifer and seeking justice for her and her family," a Ryan spokeswoman said.

Sketch released of suspect in livery sex assault

Passenger attack. The man picked up the woman who was trying to hail a cab.

Authorities are seeking the public's help identifying a man who picked up a woman trying to hail a cab in the Seaport District and then raped her in Newton.

The Middlesex district attorney's office released a sketch of the man yesterday.

At 1:30 a.m. on Aug. 6, the woman was trying to hail a cab in the Seaport District when a black Lincoln livery sedan picked her up.

"The vehicle had an app running on a tablet or smartphone that was mounted to the dashboard and displayed a map and fare tally," authorities said.

The suspect / MIDDLESEX DA'S OFFICE

Instead of going to the woman's intended address, the driver took her to a secluded area in front of a skating rink in Newton where he raped and assaulted her.

Authorities described the suspect as an Hispanic, Indian or Middle Eastern man in his late 20s or early 30s, about 6 feet tall and weighing about 240 pounds.

Information about the incident was not immediately put out because of the investigation, authorities said.

"It was determined that to protect the integrity of the investigation, it was in the best interest of the investigation not to release details of the assault as police were seeking to conduct interviews and gather evidence," the Middlesex district attorney's office said.

Anyone with information can call 617-740-7875.

Sex abuse. Settlement reached in first civil case against Penn State

Pennsylvania State University has agreed to a settlement with a 25-year-old man who was sexually abused by former assistant football coach Jerry Sandusky in a campus shower, the man's attorney said late on Saturday.

It is the first of 26 claims to be finalized in the scandal, Philadelphia attorney Tom Kline told Reuters.

He declined to give details of the settlement but the university has approved spending $60 million for the payouts.

The man, known as Victim 5 in court proceedings, was assaulted by Sandusky in August 2001, six months after then-graduate assistant Michael McQueary reported to university officials that he saw Sandusky rape a boy in a campus shower. REUTERS

Gitmo prosecutors want 2014 trial for Sept. 11 attack case

Terrorism. They were arraigned in May 2012, more than a decade after the attacks.

Prosecutors in the Guantanamo war crimes tribunal are pushing the judge to set a September 2014 trial date in the 9/11 case, a decision that could hinge on how deeply the defense is allowed to delve into the defendants' treatment in secret CIA prisons.

A U.S. military judge, Army Colonel James Pohl, will hear arguments on the issue in a weeklong pretrial hearing that begins today at the Guantanamo Bay U.S. Naval Base in Cuba.

Prosecutors want to speed up the hearing schedule and start the death penalty trial next fall for the alleged mastermind of the 9/11 plot, Khalid Sheikh Mohammed, and four alleged co-conspirators.

The court has since scheduled weeklong pretrial hearings about every six weeks, mostly to hear defense challenges.

Some hearings were canceled because of computer problems and tropical storms at the remote Caribbean base.

Others veered away from the docket to address whether military and intelligence agents were spying on supposedly confidential attorney-client discussions, an issue that is still unresolved.

Prosecutors want the judge to set firm deadlines for new filings, hold month-long hearings to work through a backlog of outstanding motions and be ready to start picking a jury on Sept. 22, 2014. REUTERS

More lawmakers urge suspending US aid to Egypt

Violence. About 800 people have died in three days of fighting in Egypt.

A growing bipartisan chorus of U.S. lawmakers said yesterday that the United States should suspend its $1.5 billion in military and economic aid to Egypt following a violent crackdown on protesters.

Senator John McCain, a top Republican on the Senate Armed Services Committee, said he now supports suspending the aid, even though he initially believed it should be continued after the Egyptian military removed democratically elected President Mohamed Morsi from office last month.

"I wanted to give [Egypt's military leaders]an opportunity to do the right thing after the coup had taken place," McCain said on CNN's "State of the Union" program. But after the crackdown, aid should be withheld, he said.

"For us to sit by and watch this happen is a violation of everything that we stood for," McCain said, arguing there are several other steps the United States could also take, such as withholding support for an International Monetary Fund loan or stopping shipments of military spare parts. REUTERS

At issue, too, is the U.S. relationship with key Gulf Arab states, including Saudi Arabia, Kuwait and the United Arab Emirates, which have promised the military-backed government some $12 billion in financial support.

Death toll climbs

Egypt's cabinet debates fate of Brotherhood

Egypt's army-backed rulers met yesterday to discuss their bloody confrontation with deposed President Mohamed Morsi's Muslim Brotherhood amid contrasting proposals for compromise and a fight to the death.

The Brotherhood, under huge pressure since police stormed its camps in Cairo on Wednesday, staged several more marches across the country to demand the reinstatement of Morsi.

Brotherhood supporters die in Egypt prison

Some 38 supporters of the Muslim Brotherhood died yesterday in an incident at an Egyptian prison, security and legal sources said, giving conflicting versions of the deaths.

The Interior Ministry did not immediately confirm the death toll, but said in a statement that a number of detainees had tried to escape from a prison on the outskirts of Cairo and had taken a police officer hostage.

Army chief to Morsi supporters: Egypt has room for everyone

Egypt's army chief, Abdel Fattah al-Sisi said in a speech to military and police officers yesterday that his message to the supporters of deposed Islamist President Mohamed Morsi is that "there is room for everyone in Egypt."

But Sisi also warned that anyone who resorts to violence would not be tolerated.

Do Not Postpone Treatment

Varicose veins can start out as a seemingly small problem, but left untreated, can become much more serious. Complications of varicose veins may include ulcers. These may form on the skin near the affected veins, particularly near the ankles.

They are caused by fluid build-up in the dysfunctional veins and can be extremely painful.

Dysfunctional veins can also increase the risk of blood clots. Patients may experience a swelling in the leg, which may indicate a blood clot. Left untreated, these clots can travel through the bloodstream and lodge near the heart or lungs, causing potentially life-threatening health problems.

If you have already decided you'd like to receive vein treatments or would like to get a diagnosis, simply schedule an appointment with USA Vein Clinics today by calling (617) 858-6870.

And the bride wore camouflage

"Duck Dynasty" star Willie Robertson just made one newlyweds' day.

On Saturday, Pennsylvania couple Mehgan Cook and Charlie Miller decided to move their wedding to the nearby Field & Stream, located outside of Pittsburgh, so they could meet Robertson, who was scheduled to be at the store for a book signing. "I was going to cancel the wedding 'cause I heard Willie was coming," Cook told KDKA-TV, which, you know, is a pretty good sign of her dedication to the whole "marriage" thing.

Robertson gave them a little blessing, telling them to always love and forgive one another. Cook donned a camouflage sash on her wedding dress, while her fiance was dressed all in camo, complete with an orange headband, lest they get shot by another hunter mistaking them for wildlife on their wedding day. Robertson said of the wedding: "That's a first for me, it's good to be a part of that. They look like my kind of folks with the camouflage. That was cool."

Tom Cruise wears thongs?

In today's Highly Dubious Yet Slightly Hilarious News, it looks like Tom Cruise demands to wear G-strings while filming his action sequences.

"He was embarrassed at first but he sees it as a way of improving his flexibility as he gets older," a source tells the Daily Star, who says that on-set wardrobe departments need around 50 pairs on hand. "He's pretty insistent about having a new thong every time. He sees it as dedication to his craft."

Cruise's love of the sexy undergarment reportedly stems from the fact they provide him with "comfort and flexibility." Right. Because nothing says comfort like a string up the butt.

Lee Daniels, Oprah Winfrey and Forest Whitaker celebrate "The Butler" at the film's L.A. premiere. / GETTY IMAGES FOR TWC

'Butler' cleans up at movie theaters

Box office. The civil rights drama pulled in $25 million.

"Lee Daniels' The Butler," a civil rights drama starring Forest Whitaker and Oprah Winfrey, easily won the weekend box office battle, pulling in $25 million from U.S. and Canadian ticket sales through Sunday.

The Jennifer Aniston comedy "We're the Millers" finished second in its second week in release, earning $17.8 million and beating "Kick-Ass 2," a comedy sequel about a teenage crime-fighting duo, which came in fourth with $13.57 million in its first three days, according to studio estimates.

The Matt Damon sci-fi thriller "Elysium" finished third in its second week, with $13.6 million.

"The Butler," featuring Winfrey's first acting role since 1998, is inspired by the life of Eugene Allen, an African-American White House butler who served eight U.S. presidents. Whitaker plays the butler opposite Winfrey, his chain-smoking, hard-drinking wife, Gloria. It was directed by Lee Daniels.

"We expected it to do well. We did not expect it to do this well," said Erik Lomis, distribution president for the Weinstein Co, the privately held company that distributed the movie.

"Kick-Ass 2," a follow-up to the 2010 original, stars Aaron Taylor-Johnson as a nerdy teenage boy who fights injustice as costumed superhero Kick-Ass. Chloe Moretz plays his sidekick, Hit Girl.

In "We're the Millers," Aniston stars as a stripper who poses as the wife of a small-time pot dealer, played by Jason Sudeikis, to help smuggle marijuana into the United States.

The privately held Weinstein Co distributed "The Butler." "Kick-Ass 2" was released by Universal Pictures, a unit of Comcast Corp. Warner Bros., a unit of Time Warner Inc, released "We're the Millers." Sony Corp.'s movie studio released "Elysium."

ONE WAY TO BE A BETTER FRIEND IS TO LISTEN

Respecting someone's boundaries is an important part of friendship. / FUSE

During a fight, one of my friends told me I'm a bad listener. I want to repair our relationship. How do I become a better listener?

Once in a while, when a conversation with someone I care about takes an unexpected turn that is not to my liking, I am tempted to stand up and yell "Cut!"

"Excuse me," I imagine myself saying, leaning over the person's shoulder, megaphone dangling at my hip. "But you are not following the script. Your lines are, 'Yes, of course, you are right. I agree wholeheartedly. I will do such and such. Anything to make you happy.'"

"Oh," they respond, slowly emerging from a daze. And they repeat the lines I have fed them. "Great, that's more like it," I reply. "Now say it with feeling."

Of course, my fantasy conversations are usually just that — fantasies. And they're not dialogues either; they are monologues — between me and my ego. Conversations between two parties who are not really listening to each other are essentially monologues masquerading as dialogues.

Most people spend their time vacillating between monologues and dialogues, with dialogues being far less frequent. Early 20th-century philosopher Martin Buber described the difference between monologues and dialogues as an "I-It" vs. "I-Thou" dynamic. In each case, the "I" represents the self — essentially, the totality of our feelings, values and perceptions that comprise our personal daily universe.

According to Buber, the essence of existence lies in how we interact with others. The "I-It" relationship is about objectification. We relate to someone as an "it" every time fear and self-interest interfere with our being able to fully experience the exquisite reality of another human being. At its worst and most obvious, "I-It" is responsible for all genres of human atrocities — from genocide and homicide to domestic violence, racism and sexism.

In our closer relationships, however, "I-It" can be much more insidious. Monologues can easily creep into and potentially corrupt the most innocent of conversations, often unintentionally. This usually occurs when we ignore other people's boundaries, focus too much on making a good impression or engage with someone based on our perceptions of how well they can serve our personal needs.

The "I-Thou" relationship, on the other hand, is about letting go of agendas. It's about authenticity, mutuality, witnessing and truth-telling. It respects differences and embraces separate but equally valid realities, which requires the courage to take risks and trust the process.

One of the hardest things we can ever do, and the greatest act of love, is to put aside our own agendas and really listen to another person. So while I may be tempted to redirect conversations that make me nervous, I know what I must ultimately do: Put down my megaphone, toss out the script, take a deep breath and say, "Yes, I am listening" — and mean it. I recommend you do the same.

Assembly required to build a dream job

Goals. Putting together the life you've always imagined for yourself isn't a sure bet — but that's the point.

Chip Hiden and Alexis Irvin traveled to get inspired. / PROVIDED

Finding and pursuing a dream job seems like a big job unto itself — just getting by is overwhelming enough. In their book "Build Your Dreams," Alexis Irvin and Chip Hiden collected advice from dream-chasing Americans who chased their passions and made it work for them.

In 2009, Irvin and Hiden graduated from college and started working, but it didn't take long for them to realize they weren't in the right fields. They quit their jobs, packed up their stuff and drove across America, interviewing successful people who had found work that they were passionate about. Their research turned into a movie called "The Dream Share Project," which inspired their book of advice from their long trip.

Work used to mean earning a salary — dreams were for your spare time. Why is having a dream job so important?
Chip Hiden: The definition of how we define success, at least in America, is shifting somewhat. Today I think that people are finding that happiness also can drive what you do with the time you give to honest work. You [can] make a lasting contribution. And I think that young people are starting to think more about the legacy they will leave. What type of mark are you going to leave on the earth? We are not just thinking about money.

Tips

Living the dream

Discover: Ask yourself: What excites you? What makes you get up in the morning? Try the potential paths you might want to follow and cross off the ones that didn't work for you.
Research: Create a plan of everything you will have to do to get to your dream job. Whatever your passion is, you can find a way to teach and educate yourself on the Internet. See how your role models got to where they are.
Embark: Take the first steps. You have your idea and you have done your research. Now it's time to raise some money and get to work.
Adapt: Find your persistence to overcome the rejections that you definitely will have.
Maintain: Find multiple revenue streams from the one idea you have, and always brainstorm on the next expansion of your idea.

Any clean energy is free energy

Re: 'Calif. needs to reconsider its electric avenues' (Metro, Aug. 15-18) Is the glass 30 percent empty or 70 percent full? Letter writer Sean O'Rourke said that with solar and wind energy, you lose 30 percent of the energy in the process of storage. That means you gain 70 percent. Not bad, considering the ecological benefits.

Hate is a stupid reason to make love

Re: 'When opposites attract: The rules of hate-sex' (Metro, Aug. 15-18) What was Twanna Hines' column on "hate-sex" about? I guess I realize that this is the type of thing someone who calls herself a sex columnist would write about, but what a ridiculous amount of nonsense. First of all, the concept is ludicrous. What an odd proclivity to devote a column to. This is stupid drivel, with an endorsement from an "expert." Who would be looking for this kind of "advice," and worse yet, who would take it?

Oprah is a true inspiration

Re: 'Oprah Winfrey is not a control freak' (Metro, Aug. 15-18) Thanks for your article on Oprah Winfrey's movie, and mentioning her mother and grandmother were both maids, and before that her ancestors were slaves. She is truly a rags-to-riches inspiration; and she, incredibly — along with Cheri Honkala, a Green Party leader — did it on her own without outside help other than her grandmother teaching her to read. Oprah rose to be a billionaire without stepping on anyone's toes; instead, she helped others out along the way.

Chris McDonough gained great media attention last year — but not for the reasons he had once hoped.

TIM SAMWAY, OLDTIME BASEBALL GAME

For the love of the game

Baseball. After a gruesome injury that made the Internet rounds last year, Chris McDonough is back playing baseball.

Wheaton College and Weymouth native Chris McDonough was well on his way to working his way back to playing semi-professional baseball last summer, coming back from an arm injury as he was playing in the Yawkey League All-Star Game at Fenway Park. That all changed after one pitch.

As McDonough reared back to fire one into the catcher in the early innings, he suffered a complete break of the humerus bone, which connects the elbow to the shoulder. The crack was so loud, several cameras picked it up loud and clear.

Within minutes after being taken to Beth Israel Deaconess Medical Center, he quickly realized his dream of making it back to semi-pro ball was over.

"I knew right away my arm was broken," the 28-year-old McDonough said. "It was more of a shock that it was a pretty big injury doing something I've done a million times before. I was in shock for a little while. It was a shock and panic thing all at once. Then there the realization that I was never going to be able to pitch again set in about half hour after I did it. It wasn't the best feeling I've ever experienced, to say the least."

McDonough set all kinds of pitching records at Wheaton and then went on to play with the Brockton Rox before being traded to a team in Kentucky in the Frontier League. After a short time there he found himself back home playing for the Al Thomas A's of the amateur Yawkey Baseball League and after suffering an injury two years ago he was fully expecting to be back playing semi-professionally this summer.

Now McDonough is forced to being strictly a designated hitter for those same Al Thomas A's, but he has a new respect for the game he has always loved.

"It's definitely a lot different," McDonough said. "I've played before not pitching, but it was always in my mind that I could pitch and play the field. It's definitely a lot less playing time, but I always have fun out here. ... I've definitely taken a step back and [I now] enjoy the game more."

This Wednesday McDonough will be playing in the 20th Annual Old Time Baseball Game founded by Boston Herald columnist Steve Buckley.

"It's great, I know they don't ask everyone to play in these games," McDonough said. "It definitely meant a lot to me to get the call when he told me I was going to play."

The 20th Annual Oldtime Baseball Game takes place this Wednesday at St. Peter's Field in Cambridge at 7 p.m. Admission is free.

MLB. Rodriguez now feuding with his own team as well as MLB

Alex Rodriguez / GETTY IMAGES

Alex Rodriguez certainly didn't receive any support from Red Sox fans at Fenway Park this past weekend as the former MVP was jeered during each and every at-bat during the three game set between Boston and New York. Now, Rodriguez can't even receive support from the Yankees.

Yanks president Randy Levine blasted back at Rodriguez's new lawyer, Joseph Tacopina, who alleges that the Yankees misled Rodriguez about his injuries in hopes that he would be unable to play baseball again.

"Alex should put up or shut up," Levine said to ESPN on Saturday, regarding Rodriguez's medical records.

Tacopina shot back: "We will put up, mark my words, we will put up," he told ESPN. "[Levine] is always a very big talker, but he is going to be humbled eventually. He is acting in a way that if his bosses and superiors and the Steinbrenner family have any sense of decency, if they are true to what the Yankees' heritage is, they would be appalled with how their president is acting. We will put up."

Had Rodriguez not been able to return to the field this season, the Yankees would have likely been able to collect insurance on his hefty contract. MATT BURKE
